Notes:

As I told my story, he interrupted repeatedly to ask in a disbelieving way - "you let this man into your house," or "And you say you let him in..." or "I just want to be sure, you let him in." When I told how I fell asleep he all but laughed. He didn't ask but very few questions in a disbelieving manner. He never tried to put me at ease at all. He didn't look for even ask about any evidence. His cold manner was such as he would hear my story - silly though it was - and ask a question or two and then leave. He told me a detective would be by in a day or two. When nobody came, my friend Mindy Sparks, called only to find out, the report had never been turned in!

When Detective Gallant came, he couldn't have been any more opposite of Officer Chavez. He tried to put me at ease, he explained why he had to ask certain questions. He let me tell the story at my own pace. He was kind, caring, and empathetic.

Officer Chavez needs some lessons from Detective Gallant!
